Since 1973, communities across America have celebrated their history, culture, and special places during the month of May. National Historic Preservation Month is a great opportunity to raise awareness about the benefits and importance of historic preservation.

The 1973 Proclamation declaring May as Historic Preservation Month was presented by President Richard Nixon. He stated: “As the pace of change accelerates in the world around us, Americans more than ever need a lively awareness of our roots and origins in the past on which to base our sense of identity in the present and our directions for the future.”

This year during Historic Preservation Month, the Vienna Historic Preservation Commission would like to call attention to and commend the Dooly County Board of Commissioners on the recent Dooly County Courthouse preservation project.

Thank you for your high standards of excellence and for contributing in such a major way to the lasting beauty of Vienna's Central Historic District and the preservation of the most historically distinctive landmark in Dooly County.

The Dooly County Courthouse is definitely the heart and soul of downtown Vienna. It is the dominate focal point of our city overlooking the town square. The building serves as an anchor for the businesses around it. As described in a publication by the National Trust for Historic Preservation, "Unlike many modern replacements, the older courthouses cannot be mistaken for a supermarket, elementary school, or drive-in bank. They are symbols of community civic pride."

William Faulkner recognized the importance of the county courthouse with a description in his book Requiem for a Nun: "But above all, the courthouse, the center, the focus, the hub; sitting looming in the center of the county’s circumference … musing, brooding, symbolic and powerful, tall as a cloud, solid as rock, dominating all."

May we remember that we are only the keepers of these landmark properties. Thank you, Dooly County Commissioners, for keeping our landmark well for the generations to come.

Trees are for the Birds — or Should Be

March/April 2020 • Editor: Dr. James R. Fazio

"Speaking of trees without mentioning birds is akin to speaking about human architecture without mentioning its purpose and occupants," said Gillian Martin, an Arbor Day Foundation member and advocate for bird protection. Bird habitat should definitely be listed among the myriad benefits trees provide. Birds are an essential component of a sustainable landscape — and they are in serious trouble.

It is not often that nature makes headlines in the mass media. But that is exactly what happened last year after Science magazine reported on the findings of Dr. Ken Rosenberg, applied conservation scientist at the Cornell Laboratory of Ornithology. Dr. Rosenberg and his team of experts sent a shock wave through the world of ecologists by revealing that wild bird populations in the U.S. and Canada have declined by almost 30% since 1970. This represents a loss of 2.9 billion breeding adult birds. Dr. Rosenberg pointed out that in less than a single human lifetime, we've lost almost a third of our birds.

As bleak as this picture may be, it is one that can be changed, and trees — and the people who work with them and those who appreciate them — can play a large part. In this issue of Tree City USA Bulletin, we present some ideas about how you can help.

WHAT BIRDS DO FOR US

Birds provide enormous pleasure for those who enjoy watching them — and provide the basis of a $41 billion industry. Birds also quietly go about keeping insect populations in check. Some, especially hummingbirds, even contribute to our food supplies by pollinating about 5% of the plants grown for human consumption. Here are some other statistics, courtesy of the Garden Club of America:

- A Baltimore oriole can consume 17 hairy caterpillars in a minute.
- A house wren feeds 500 insects to its young every summer afternoon.
- A pair of flickers consider 5,000 ants a mere snack.
- A swallow can devour 1,000 insects every 12 hours.
- A brown thrasher has been known to eat 6,180 insects in one day.
- A pair of scarlet tanagers have been seen eating 630 newly hatched caterpillars of the gypsy moth in 18 minutes.

It’s amazing how much debris can accumulate in a gutter over fifteen years. Until the first Saturday in April, I don’t think we had cleaned out our gutters since they were installed. The coronavirus pandemic has necessitated most of us spend more time at home, so I’m catching up on some overdue maintenance.

Confinement of any type is seldom viewed as a blessing, but we’re fortunate if we have that option. There are masses of people who would love to stay home but can’t. First-responders are working long hours in conditions more hazardous than anyone could have imagined. Healthcare providers are worn to a frazzle as they risk their own lives to help save others. Grocery store workers are wiping down carts and stocking shelves. They were rarely thought of as heroes in the past. Today, however, I’d like to hug every one of them.

Druggists are still dispensing medicine. Restaurant employees are cooking take-out orders. Truckers are delivering goods to warehouses which people in vans bring to our porches. And the folks at the post office know the mail must go through. People in factories are wearing masks while making things we need. Many are nervous about going in, yet thankful to be on payroll. Coronavirus is fatal to jobs but not bills. Payments come due every month and essentials are quickly depleted.

I’ve only touched the surface of professions which are severely affected by COVID-19. My point is that those of us who can stay home in relative comfort and safety have a lot to be thankful for. I’m sure you already know that, but it takes a lot of reminding for me.

Jane was pruning shrubbery in our back yard when she noticed a weed with a yellow flower growing in our gutter. Despite its colorful bloom, I knew it shouldn’t be there. So, I got a ladder and pulled it out. I was surprised to find that weed had a lot of company. A row of green unwanted guests was thriving in a mixture of leaves and sand-like particles that had washed down from our shingles. The debris was several inches deep and tightly packed by time and moisture. I had to loosen it with a trowel before using a big shop vacuum to suck it out.

And I did something foolish. I ignored some advice that I had included in a small book titled Lessons From the Ladder. There’s a sticker on many ladders which warns, “DO NOT STAND ABOVE THIS STEP,” but I climbed a rung higher. It turned out okay, but it was a poor choice. All I had to do was borrow a longer ladder from my neighbor, Ken, or get one from the farm on Monday. But the gutter needed cleaning and I didn’t want to wait, for I had already waited too long.

I hope by the time this is published COVID-19 will be on the downslope. Meanwhile I’ll spend some time taking care of a few things I’ve neglected, like cleaning out the gutters. It’s also a good opportunity to clean out my spiritual gutters. They tend to fill gradually with bits of sediment. They look about the same from ground level, revealing nothing that demands urgent attention. At some point, however, the weeds take hold and the roots grow deeper. And we venture precariously near the top of the ladder trying to treat the symptoms rather than the cause.

Spiritual gutters need thorough cleansings. “Nothing but the Blood,” a hymn written in the 1800s, succinctly tells us how. “What can wash away my sin? Nothing but the blood of Jesus. What can make me whole again? Nothing but the blood of Jesus.” When a rain gutter is filled with debris, it doesn’t function like it’s supposed to. And when a spiritual gutter is cluttered with sin, it doesn’t work like God intended. There’s a cost that comes with neglect, and a joy that comes with a clean fresh start. There will never be a better time for a new beginning than right now.
I Love You Mom!
